TWO DRUG OVERDOSES AT MOBIL ON THE RUN IN CHESTERFIELD VALLEY

This is from the KMOV TV New website:

CHESTERFIELD, Mo. (First Alert 4) - A high school basketball coach's quick thinking and CPR training helped save two overdose victims at a Chesterfield convenience store.

Tim Bowdern was making his daily stop at an On The Run store when he found a man unconscious on the floor by the electronic slot machines.

"There's a man laying on the ground. Nobody's paying attention at all. He's just laying there on his side," Bowdern said.

Bowdern told an employee to call 911 and began administering aid to the unresponsive man.

"We got him over on his side, and that's when we saw drugs, some kind of a pipe," Bowdern said.

He started chest compressions until a Chesterfield police officer arrived and administered naloxone.

"She went right to it and probably saved his life. He was blue for at least five minutes," Bowdern said.

Sergeant Robert Powell with the Chesterfield Police Department said officers carry naloxone kits in their patrol cars.

"That training kicks in and you have to react," Powell said. "It highlights the level of training officers receive because in situations like this, every second counts."

Police found a second overdose victim while searching for the first man's vehicle.

"We were able to identify a vehicle, went to it, found someone else unresponsive. They had to breach the lock, pull that person out and perform medical assistance to them as well," Powell said.

Bowdern expressed frustration that other customers had not responded to the emergency before he took action.

"I felt like people didn't react the way I thought they would. We have a guy on the floor and nobody's reacting," Bowdern said.

Despite his concerns about bystander response, Bowdern praised the quick police response.

"It's a miracle that man's alive. I hope that guy realizes that people did respond," Bowdern said.

SANITARY SEWER REPAIR BID FOR 2026. Unlike many cities, Chesterfield has a program to repair sanitary sewers on residential property. Each homeowner pays $28 a year to fund the service. This year the bid of Tope, Inc. for $463,425 was accepted on an 8-0 vote.

The City only received two bids and one was disqualified as it was improperly filed.
